

Started on	Wednesday, 8 May 2024, 9:29 PM
State	Finished
Completed on	Wednesday, 8 May 2024, 9:52 PM
Time taken	23 mins 35 secs
Grade	10.00 out of 10.00 (100%)

Question 1

Complete

Mark 1.00 out of 1.00

In his famous study of myth, The Hero with a Thousand Faces, Joseph Campbell writes about the archetypal hero who has ventured outside the boundaries of the village and, after many trials and adventures, has returned with the boon that will save or enlighten his fellows. Like Carl Jung, Campbell believes that the story of the hero is part of the collective unconscious of all humankind. He likens the returning hero to the sacred or tabooed personage described by James Frazier in The Golden Bough. Such an individual must, in many instances of myth, be insulated from the rest of society, "not merely for his own sake but for the sake of others; for since the virtue of holiness is, so to say, a powerful explosive which the smallest touch can detonate, it is necessary in the interest of the general safety to keep it within narrow bounds."

QUESTION: The title of the book conveys _____

- a. the many languages into which the myth of the hero has been translated.
- b. the many villagers whose lives are changed by the story the hero has to tell.
- c. the universality of the myth of the hero who journeys into the wilderness.
- d. the fact that the hero journeys into many different imaginary countries.

The correct answer is:

the universality of the myth of the hero who journeys into the wilderness.

Question 2

Complete

Mark 1.00 out of 1.00

The Sami are an indigenous people living in the northern parts of Norway, Sweden, Finland, and Russia's Kola peninsula. Originally, the Sami religion was animistic; that is, for them, nature and natural objects had a conscious life, a spirit. Therefore, one was expected to move quietly in the wilderness and avoid making a disturbance out of courtesy to these spirits. Chengis Khan is said to have declared that the Sami were one people he would never try to fight again. Because the Sami were not warriors and did not believe in war, they disappeared in times of conflict. They were known as "peaceful retreaters."

Question: The closest meaning of the underlined word animistic, as it is used in the passage, is

- a. the primitive belief that people can be reincarnated as animals.
- b. the belief that animals are gods.
- c. the irrational belief in supernatural beings.
- d. the belief that animals and plants have souls.

The correct answer is:

the belief that animals and plants have souls.

Question 3

Complete

Mark 1.00 out of 1.00

In his famous study of myth, The Hero with a Thousand Faces, Joseph Campbell writes about the archetypal hero who has ventured outside the boundaries of the village and, after many trials and adventures, has returned with the boon that will save or enlighten his fellows. Like Carl Jung, Campbell believes that the story of the hero is part of the collective unconscious of all humankind. He likens the returning hero to the sacred or tabooed personage described by James Frazier in The Golden Bough. Such an individual must, in many instances of myth, be insulated from the rest of society, "not merely for his own sake but for the sake of others; for since the virtue of holiness is, so to say, a powerful explosive which the smallest touch can detonate, it is necessary in the interest of the general safety to keep it within narrow bounds."

There is _____ between the archetypal hero who has journeyed into the wilderness and the poet who has journeyed into the realm of imagination. Both places are dangerous and full of wonders, and both, at their deepest levels, are journeys that take place in the kingdom of the unconscious mind, a place that, in Campbell's words, "goes down into unsuspected Aladdin caves. There are not only jewels but dangerous jinn abide..."

Question: The phrase that would most accurately fit into the blank in the first sentence of the second paragraph is:

- a. much similarity.
- b. an abiding devotion.
- c. long-standing conflict.
- d. a wide gulf.

The correct answer is: much similarity.

Question 4

Complete

Mark 1.00 out of 1.00

In his famous study of myth, The Hero with a Thousand Faces, Joseph Campbell writes about the archetypal hero who has ventured outside the boundaries of the village and, after many trials and adventures, has returned with the boon that will save or enlighten his fellows. Like Carl Jung, Campbell believes that the story of the hero is part of the collective unconscious of all humankind. He likens the returning hero to the sacred or tabooed personage described by James Frazier in The Golden Bough. Such an individual must, in many instances of myth, be insulated from the rest of society, "not merely for his own sake but for the sake of others; for since the virtue of holiness is, so to say, a powerful explosive which the smallest touch can detonate, it is necessary in the interest of the general safety to keep it within narrow bounds."

There is _____ between the archetypal hero who has journeyed into the wilderness and the poet who has journeyed into the realm of imagination. Both places are dangerous and full of wonders, and both, at their deepest levels, are journeys that take place in the kingdom of the unconscious mind, a place that, in Campbell's words, "goes down into unsuspected Aladdin caves. There are not only jewels but dangerous jinn abide..."

QUESTION:

Based on the passage, which of the following best describes the story that will likely be told by Campbell's returning hero and Frazier's sacred or tabooed personage?

- a. a story based on a dangerous lie
- b. a warning of catastrophe to come
- c. a radically mind-altering story
- d. a story that will terrify people to no good end

The correct answer is: a radically mind-altering story

Question 5

Complete

Mark 1.00 out of 1.00

In his famous study of myth, The Hero with a Thousand Faces, Joseph Campbell writes about the archetypal hero who has ventured outside the boundaries of the village and, after many trials and adventures, has returned with the boon that will save or enlighten his fellows. Like Carl Jung, Campbell believes that the story of the hero is part of the collective unconscious of all humankind. He likens the returning hero to the sacred or tabooed personage described by James Frazier in The Golden Bough. Such an individual must, in many instances of myth, be insulated from the rest of society, "not merely for his own sake but for the sake of others; for since the virtue of holiness is, so to say, a powerful explosive which the smallest touch can detonate, it is necessary in the interest of the general safety to keep it within narrow bounds."

There is _____ between the archetypal hero who has journeyed into the wilderness and the poet who has journeyed into the realm of imagination. Both places are dangerous and full of wonders, and both, at their deepest levels, are journeys that take place in the kingdom of the unconscious mind, a place that, in Campbell's words, "goes down into unsuspected Aladdin caves. There are not only jewels but dangerous jinn abide..."

Question:

Which of the following is the most accurate definition of the underlined word boon as the word is used in the passage?

- a. prize
- b. blessing
- c. gift
- d. charm

The correct answer is: blessing

Question 6

Complete

Mark 1.00 out of 1.00

In his famous study of myth, The Hero with a Thousand Faces, Joseph Campbell writes about the archetypal hero who has ventured outside the boundaries of the village and, after many trials and adventures, has returned with the boon that will save or enlighten his fellows. Like Carl Jung, Campbell believes that the story of the hero is part of the collective unconscious of all humankind. He likens the returning hero to the sacred or tabooed personage described by James Frazier in The Golden Bough. Such an individual must, in many instances of myth, be insulated from the rest of society, "not merely for his own sake but for the sake of others; for since the virtue of holiness is, so to say, a powerful explosive which the smallest touch can detonate, it is necessary in the interest of the general safety to keep it within narrow bounds."

question: Based on the passage, which of the following would best describe the hero's journey?

- a. whimsical
- b. terrifying
- c. wonderful
- d. awesome

The correct answer is: awesome

Question 7

Complete

Mark 1.00 out of 1.00

All drivers are responsible for refueling their vehicles at the end of each shift. All other routine maintenance should be performed by maintenance-department personnel, who are also responsible for maintaining service records. If a driver believes a vehicle is in need of mechanical repair, the driver should fill out the pink repair requisition form and give it to the shift supervisor. The driver should also notify the shift supervisor verbally whether, in the driver's opinion, the vehicle must be repaired immediately or may be driven until the end of the shift.

Question: The passage implies that the vehicles

- a. are in frequent need of repair.
- b. are refueled when they have less than half a tank of gas.
- c. are refueled at the end of every shift.
- d. have the oil changed every 1,000 miles.

The correct answer is: are refueled at the end of every shift.

Question 8

Complete

Mark 1.00 out of 1.00

Read the following passage and answer the question

All drivers are responsible for refueling their vehicles at the end of each shift. All other routine maintenance should be performed by maintenance-department personnel, who are also responsible for maintaining service records. If a driver believes a vehicle is in need of mechanical repair, the driver should fill out the pink repair requisition form and give it to the shift supervisor. The driver should also notify the shift supervisor verbally whether, in the driver's opinion, the vehicle must be repaired immediately or may be driven until the end of the shift.

question: If a vehicle is due to have the oil changed, whose responsibility is it?

- a. outside service mechanics
- b. maintenance-department personnel
- c. shift supervisors
- d. the drivers at the end of their shifts

The correct answer is: maintenance-department personnel

Question 9

Complete

Mark 1.00 out of 1.00

In his famous study of myth, The Hero with a Thousand Faces, Joseph Campbell writes about the archetypal hero who has ventured outside the boundaries of the village and, after many trials and adventures, has returned with the boon that will save or enlighten his fellows. Like Carl Jung, Campbell believes that the story of the hero is part of the collective unconscious of all humankind. He likens the returning hero to the sacred or tabooed personage described by James Frazier in The Golden Bough. Such an individual must, in many instances of myth, be insulated from the rest of society, "not merely for his own sake but for the sake of others; for since the virtue of holiness is, so to say, a powerful explosive which the smallest touch can detonate, it is necessary in the interest of the general safety to keep it within narrow bounds."

There is _____ between the archetypal hero who has journeyed into the wilderness and the poet who has journeyed into the realm of imagination. Both places are dangerous and full of wonders, and both, at their deepest levels, are journeys that take place in the kingdom of the unconscious mind, a place that, in Campbell's words, "goes down into unsuspected Aladdin caves. There are not only jewels but dangerous jinn abide..."

Question:

As depicted in the last sentence of the passage, "Aladdin caves" are most likely to be found by any individual in

- a. fairy tales
- b. holy books
- c. the subconscious mind
- d. the fantasies of the hero

The correct answer is: the subconscious mind

Question 10

Complete

Mark 1.00 out of 1.00

The Sami are an indigenous people living in the northern parts of Norway, Sweden, Finland, and Russia's Kola peninsula. Originally, the Sami religion was animistic; that is, for them, nature and natural objects had a conscious life, a spirit. Therefore, one was expected to move quietly in the wilderness and avoid making a disturbance out of courtesy to these spirits. Chengis Khan is said to have declared that the Sami were one people he would never try to fight again. Because the Sami were not warriors and did not believe in war, they disappeared in times of conflict. They were known as "peaceful retreaters."

Question: What is the meaning of the underlined word courtesy as it is used in the passage?

- a. caution
- b. fear
- c. respect
- d. timidity

The correct answer is: respect

